

PCI/ISA/PCMCIA to Serial: Why does my system complain about a "Missing digital signature"

Some Windows systems request a digital signature from Microsoft, when installing a driver. This request is frequently misunderstood as an error message. But in fact it is not. The driver did not pass the test, because it never participated in it. This is normal, especially with the latest versions of drivers. Not even all of the Microsoft drivers are signed. Just confirm to continue the installation.
